IN THE INTERESTS OF ACCURACY

Mr. McGillivray has been having some trouble to make clear the stand which his party took on the vote to reject the offers for the northern railway lines. That is hardly surprising, seeing that the party did not take a stand on it. A Conservative member did not oppose the motion to reject; it was assumed that they were content to allow it to pass, and the vote was officially recorded as being "unanimous" which is the custom in such circumstances. The party had no dissatisfaction, and the leader wants him and his followers noted in some way as having been consenting parties to the motion, despite their failure to say so when asked to record their views on it. What the legislation needs is a mind-reader.

Meanwhile, Mr. Speaker, the clerk of the Legislature and the newspapers stand corrected, and the public will note that the Conservative group were neither for the motion nor against it.

THE TAX RATE

Commissioner Mitchell forecasts an increase in the city tax rate of two, or possibly three, mills. That would make the rate for the year 48 or 49 mills on the dollar of assessed value, against 46 in last year. The additional amount will be required because of expenses in the running of the schools, and increases in some other departmental expenditures. While an increase in taxation is never welcome, increased school costs are inevitable, and other taxes of 18½ to 20½ have been carried at a minimum outlay under pressure of the need of economy.

The alternative to an increased tax rate is an increased assessment. The latter is the only method available under present conditions, and will not be until there is a substantial growth of population and a rise in the actual market value of property generally. Fortunately this change in conditions is not far off, but it will be slow and gradually increasing assessment may be expected in future years to help keep down the rate of levy. For the time it is better to add a couple of mills to the rate than to run the risk of making a fictitious valuation of property for taxing purposes.

MIGRATION TO BE CHECKED?

A bill is before the Congress of the United States by which it is proposed to restrict the number of Canadians who may enter that country in a year to make their home. It has the backing of the Secretary of State, and it is likely but not certain that the Canadian government would support the enactment of such a measure to no sense offensive to either the interests or the dignity of the Dominion.

Emigrating Canadians from the quota law was doubtless intended as a gesture of friendship toward a kindred and neighboring people, but the government of the time behind the act, but compensations could not be had at the price. We could have gone along without that particular mark of deference a good deal better than we can without the thousands of Canadian citizens who fled to the United States who could go. If Congress is now minded to put up the bars against our misguided migrating countrymen, as it has done against people from Europe, that will be a measure of practical helpfulness toward the development and prosperity of the Dominion.

CLOSE THE GAPS

The report of the Public Works Department in the Legislature shows that while less was done in the way of permanent highway building last year than the year before, what was done was the equivalent of a graced highway from Edmonton to the international boundary well within sight. This highway is now complete from Edmonton to Nanton, with the section from Nanton to Macleod under contract. From Macleod to the border, though, little has been done. The Nanton-Macleod stage will be finished in the spring, leaving only a gap of about 30 miles between Macleod and Cardston in a permanent highway which will open up Alberta as soon as the border is closed to traffic in the United States.

There is also a thirty mile gap between the end of the road system west from Edmonton and the highway in Jasper Park. The road from Edmonton west is not all gravelled, but it is well graded and often as good as roads in eastern Canada can get for a dirt road. Whatever else is done in the way of highway building this summer, these two thirty-mile gaps should be closed. That between Macleod and Cardston should be brought up to permanent highway standard, and that on the Jasper trail graded and ditched up to the standard of the dirt road. Jasper Park will be available to the U.S. tourist at least in fine weather, while he will be able to get as far as Edmonton in any sort of weather.

Conversation

By EDGAR E. GUEST

We sat and talked those secret things Which lie down deep within the brain; The strange, reflective journeys Men take upon their spirit wings. To us the dreams transcending seemed gain To which we could not attain.

And taking time to hours free by At one time and distance were forgot. He showed his inner self, and we can not, "All out!" the porter called; and then We came to earth and won again.

An Old School Teacher

By DR. FRANK CRANE

I once went back to town where I was born on a winter's day and on the street met an old dame. I remembered her, she was young and pretty. And she also had been kind to me, though she worried a great deal about my health. But my mother said my father was still in mind, so we sat down on the same spot the teacher had seated and tried—tired. Under a funny-looking little hat her nose and mouth were very prominent, and she had a most singular expression. The books and papers she carried seemed to have been written by hand.

And the day was not beginning.

She remembered us, and we sat down the same spot, and I saw her wear on the school lines of weakness came settling down.

I have never forgotten the impression of the nun-like woman, frustrated. She had missed all most everything in life.

She stood for tragedy as bad as terrible catastrophe had happened to her. Only the slow sitting of the sun, the fading of the day, the final drip of daily irritations had worn her down, had left her, faded, baffled.

The teacher was a tragic figure of life. The story-book kind is rare. We are not the victim of a spectacular catastrophe, but the quiet, gradual, insidious kind sink in an ocean catastrophe; we sink in a rut, with no ending, but by ordinary, not the unusual.

With Cyano De Bergerac, when our Nemesis comes to us, we are not prepared for it. We are like a lockey with a block of wood; like Don Quixote, our master in disguise.

The tragedy of the teacher was the habit to keep her eyes closed, and to sit with her head down.

There is one way out. It is finding retreats for the soul, for the spirit, for the body.

There is no way out. It is finding retreats for the soul, for the spirit, for the body.

For every one tragedy that we read about, such as the sinking of the Lusitania, there are thousands of unknown tragedies which are simply the sitting in the sitting room.

Man must not only know how to live in a great emergency, but he must learn how to escape in a minor emergency. He must have some windows to his advantages of having a love of music or the art or of stories or of some hobby, which will give him a chance to get away from the monotony of ordinary men to escape the monotony of ordinary men.

The best escapes are in religion, in art and in intellectual enterprises that absorb us.

CAMROSE TRIM NAVAL OCTETTE

Exclusive to Bulletin
CAMROSE, Feb. 27.—In a not so exciting hockey game at Camrose, Alberta, the local Edmonton navy team was defeated by the local team with a score of 6 to 5.

The teams had not won two previous games, but the result of the game had won one game, therefore it was to be expected that the third game would be a hard-fought battle by both teams to make a winning effort. The game was a hard-fought battle, with a large crowd of spectators and hockey fans present, and they were soon to be disappointed by the hitting of bodies in one of the best games ever seen.

The Navy made many drives on the Camrose goal, but goalkeeper met the drives, and the local team developed good saves, and the Navy had strong defense right in the end of the game.

The line-up was as follows:

The Navy: Goal, Wynne; defense, Mrs. McLean, Johnson, Grover, Craft, Martel, Power; Goal, Duff, defense, Banks, Hay, Henderson; forward, Marshall, Henderon; referee, Johnson; Umpire, H. U. Johnston.

Tries Many Times to Commit Suicide

WEYBURN, Feb. 27.—Joseph Lafallanne, 40, carpenter, Val Marie district, died here Saturday night following an attempt to end his life. Becoming desperate, he had crawled into a hole with a sharp instrument. When he did not succeed, he crawled out, cleaned his rifle and directed three shots at his head. The three bullets did not make him bleed, so he crawled back into the hole and sent a fourth bullet through his chin. The bullet passed under an eye. He will probably die.

DOROTHY DIX

The Problem of the Wife Keeping on With Her Job After Marriage Has Both Its Bright and Dull Sides, and Each Case Must Be Decided Individually—but the Real Danger lies in Weakening the Fiber of the Husband's Earning Power

There is no question which I am asked oftenest than this: Should a woman continue to work after she is married? To which, of course, I can only reply that it depends upon circumstances, and that case has to be decided.

Very often a young couple fall in love with each other when the man is not making enough money to support a wife. If they marry, the woman might be temporarily able to marry if means waiting through long years of poverty, but she will wait until their hearts with desire for each other and in time when their romance fades and the ardor goes, she will be left alone and so they miss all the joy and rapture of youth.

But if the girl keeps on with her job they can marry at the mating time of life in the freedom of their youth, and have the happiness of a home and family. In such cases it seems to me far better for them to marry and then work, than to wait for her home that they have to start up and not have any home at all.

There are other cases in which it is an economic necessity for the wife to follow a profession. Consider, for example, in the outside world, cases in which there is a sick husband or a husband who is not a go-getter. Some of the best men in the world, some of the most noble-spirited, are not able to earn a living. They have no money to support their wives with their romance faded and the ardor gone, and so they miss all the joy and rapture of youth.

But if the girl keeps on with her job they can marry at the mating time of life in the freedom of their youth, and have the happiness of a home and family. In such cases it seems to me far better for them to marry and then work, than to wait for her home that they have to start up and not have any home at all.

There are still other women to whom God has given some special talent and whom He has destined to be business women or lawyers or doctors or writers or actors. These women are never happy married, and when they marry, they do not let go of their work. The result is that the work that is the very breath of life to them and which they have made a study of time and study fitting themselves to just because they are married.

When a woman has a husband like this it is often advisable for her to work outside of the home, because the income means a better mode of living for the family and gives her children's education and environment a better chance.

There are still other women to whom God has given some special talent and whom He has destined to be business women or lawyers or doctors or writers or actors. These women are never happy married, and when they marry, they do not let go of their work. The result is that the work that is the very breath of life to them and which they have made a study of time and study fitting themselves to just because they are married.

That is the side of the case in which the wife's work is undoubtedly helpful and desirable. The other side of the case is the fact that for wife to work outside of the home, the husband's work is not necessarily good for the husband's health. As soon as we find that their wives can support the family they sit down and feel that they do not have to work. Frequently the wife is the one who works.

So always as wife they see no necessity of working, because there is always a home to go to where there is a good bed to sleep in and three square meals a day, and they can tough wife for a little spending.

Think over the extremely successful business and professional women you know and you will be forcibly struck with the realization that these are the ones of whom he who hasn't an account-husband whom she is supporting.

Yet if these men had married clinging vines and had to make the family live on the vine, they would have given up the vine long ago. Many a woman makes a strong man just as many a strong woman makes a weak man his chance to fly.

Therefore, just as the woman who works outside of the home helps her husband's health, so surely every other the money she brings in does not compensate for the lack of her presence in the home.

Often what her husband needs is not her financial assistance but for her to be an inspiration to him, and for her to keep his mind and memory active. She can do this by reading books every day and comes home tired at night, doesn't seem able to supply this particular sort of husband.

Speaking of this, a man says to me: "I love my wife and she loves me, but she insists on working in a minor position as compared to mine. The future of her position is all, while mine holds great possibilities. If I could only get her to give up her job, I could easily support us both."

What about the man who has married clinging vines and has to make the family live on the vine? He would have given up the vine long ago. Many a woman makes a strong man just as many a strong woman makes a weak man his chance to fly.

Therefore, just as the woman who works outside of the home helps her husband's health, so surely every other the money she brings in does not compensate for the lack of her presence in the home.

And perhaps that is the final answer to the question of whether a woman should continue on with her job after marriage, except in cases where the husband is a clinging vine and the wife is a go-getter.

And when she marries a strong man she takes away from him the greatest strength he has. And when she marries a weak man she takes away from the last gasp he has left.

The one thing that drives him on is the knowledge that his wife is a clinging vine and the wife to drive him to the last gasp he has left.

And when she marries a strong man she takes away from him the greatest strength he has. And when she marries a weak man she takes away from the last gasp he has left.

But these questions should all be settled by every couple on the safe side of the altar. Then, if a man is not willing for his wife to keep on with her job, he could take her off of her job and get another job, and if she is not willing to give it up could keep it and let the man take care of the man's wife.

That Mr. Gourlay showed keen business foresight, is proven by the fact that the Gourlay Music Store, located at 10420 Jasper Avenue, ranks among one of the most enter- taining stores in the city today. And there is every indication that expansion in the future will be just as rapid as in the past.

AT THE RIALTO

Madge Bellamy, beautiful film star, proved many months ago that she was a born forte. In "Very Confidential," her new picture which opens today at the Rialto theatre for a three day showing, she is building with humor and responsiveness one of the most becoming gowns ever seen on the screen.

On the same program as the adored feature is a splendid Western. The star of the outfit is the famous Bob Custer in "Terror of the Cat." It is a series of pictures that Custer has made to date.

On the stage Harry Willis and Peggy Willis, and Wing Chung, trumpet player.

AT THE MONARCH

"Second to None" is a British naval film produced by Britannia Pictures after "Hartmann's".

It opens at the Monarch today. Based on a theme of the day, it is the story of a girl of the Senior Service, the film has a decided vein of patriotic sentiment.

The film was produced with the co-operation of the Admiralty and the Royal Navy, and the scenes in this facility, some of its scenes, were shot on H.M.S. "Acasta" and other British ships.

An unique feature of the production is the use of scenes which purports to take place in the world of warship, including interior scenes in the ship's engine room.

The lower deck mess, which was actually never built, was actually reconstructed in the studio. This therefore achieves a record in naval film making, as no such thing has never been done before.

AT THE PRINCESS

Zane Grey, perhaps the best known of American authors, has written "Tonto Rim," and Paramount is at the Princess.

This new production is at the Princess, and the announcement with no little interest, comes from the pen of Grey, who has written many stories from the pen of Grey in years.

Readers and motion picture fans alike will be interested in the performances of the cast of "Tonto Rim," and the story of the "Thunderbird" and "The Mystery Horse" are some of his successes which have been put on the screen.

AT THE DREAMLAND

Everything is up to the air at the Dreamland theatre today for "Under the Tonto Rim." Paramount's laughing comedy of aviation, that "took off last year," is back again, and it is drawing thousands of crowds in the history of the Dreamland.

Glenn Tryon, the aviator and the comic, is the lead, and the able antics keep the audience in an uproar from beginning to end. An eas peacock flies through the hilarious manner that is a plus point.

Play Ruth Miller, as the girl in the first performance of her career.

AT THE EMPRESS

Apparently Director James Stuart has no chance of a success during the filming of his first giantic historical and romantic epic, "The Tonto Rim," at the Empress theatre today.

Five hundred extras, mostly sailors, were engaged to play the role of British sailors in the battle scene, and the British fleet was engaged to prove the historical accuracy of the scenes.

The marines are probably the best known of the British forces in the United States being active in the various cities.

While the drill and the music have been almost completely changed by modern warfare, these men have adopted their production not only because of their own merit, but also training but because of their unusual demands upon a moment's notice in time of war.

Featured players in the cast of "Under the Tonto Rim" are Esther Williams, Glenn Tryon, Bebe Daniels, George Bancroft, Charles Farrell, and the Walkers.

AT THE PANTOMIME

What would you do if, in a thoughtful moment, in your imagination, you saw a young woman a heroine, present and you suddenly realized that she was a man? What would you do if, in your imagination, you saw a man, a sailor, even more attractive than the woman you last saw? How would you have difficulty in realizing that the woman you last saw had been transformed with the facts?

The British, in fact, have a Barry, the hero, or rather the hero of circumstances, in the "Pantomime" at the Dreamland. Otto Harbach, force comedy, opens at the Dreamland Feb. 27.

William Woods, the English attraction at the Pantages theatre, opens at the Dreamland Feb. 27.
